

Slovenian Youth in the Grip of Individualism, Precarity and Stress

How do young people in Slovenia cope in times of stress and increasing individualization? Which values are important to them? What do they want to achieve and what do they fear the most in life? How do they spend their free time? How much do they trust the Government and the European Union, and how much responsibility are they willing to take themselves? And most importantly: do they see their future abroad or in Slovenia? These are some of the questions to which young Slovenes responded in a brand new empirical Youth Study Slovenia 2018/2019 conducted by the Friedrich Ebert Foundation: in a representative sample 1,000 young people aged 14 to 29 were asked about their attitudes, expectations, and anxieties.

The study is the second youth study the Friedrich Ebert Foundation has conducted in Slovenia (the first one was in 2013). It not only describes how youth in Slovenia see their future, but also gives recommendations as to how the society at large should assist them and provide opportunities in Slovenia. Interesting regional comparisons will be presented as the study is part of the Friedrich-Ebert Foundation's international youth research project, which involves 11 simultaneous studies in Southeast Europe: ten national studies plus a regional study.

We kindly invite you to the first presentation of the main findings of the Youth Study Slovenia 2018/2019. Join us and share your opinion.
